DEATH RELIEVES

AGED CITIZEN

Mr. May died Thursday morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Alvin Simons, where he has been ill for the last four months. A THOUGHT FOR EVERY DAY.

Frederick M. Steele.

If you, my friend,—just you and I,—Should smile instead of worry; If, as the days and moments fly Amid life's stress and hurry, We aim to make our thoughts more kind, Our hearts and words more tender, To be to others' faults more blind, For evil good to render: Then what a change would come about In all this dark world's story, If thus the Christ through us shone out, Revealing there his glory!—The Sentinel.

GREAT CAMP MEETING

At Kingswood-Writes Miss Tula Daniel--Four Hundred Dollars Raised For Missions--Fine Preaching

PRETTY ROAD BUILT

Dear Mr. Baobage: I enclose you some good clippings for the News. This from the Commoner, (Bryan's paper) you should put in. It will let the Democrats and Republicans see we have temperance men to the fore in the race that is on. Every-one knows Watterson's whiskey proclivities. They may not all know of his downfall. This of Klipping is fine: "If you can" and The South's contribution to the nation," should go into your paper columns.

We had a great camp meeting at Kingswood, largest attendance in its history. No gate fee. Amount $400.00 for missionaries to Pusia collected in about fifteen minutes, "hilarious giving" it was in truth nearly $500.00, besides was given at another time. Four student volunteers for foreign fields spoke. A great army of missionaries and preachers go forth from Kingswood College to bless the world. A beautiful road has been made by Bro. Hughes from Harned to Kingswood. Come next year and hear the fine preaching and singing; you will not regret it. Rev. J. W. Hughes and wife are a great blessing to Breckenridge county; sincerely, Tula Daniel, August 26, Hardinsburg.

COUNTY FAIR

Secretary Skillman And President Beard Highly Pleased With Success Financially And Socially

TRAIN SERVICE GOOD

Those who did not go to the county fair are sorry now. This year was Breckenridge county's greatest fair and everybody had a great time. It closed Thursday afternoon.

The races and rings were fine. The cattle show was finest ever. Nearly all the exhibits of mules, hogs and sheep were from home and the citizens of the county had right to be very proud of them.

Floral Hall was crowded. There was a perfect deluge of beautiful handiwork by Breckenridge county women. This committee was showered with compliments on the response given to their request.

Active Men, Not Dreamers Needed in Official Places.

The people must put men of business and thought in official places or suffer from neglecting to do so. The demand of the day is for men with ideas and strength to carry them out and not men with dreams or desire to pamper to public favor. The people sooner or later see the errors they make and one lesson should certainly be enough. Look well as to whom you give your suffrage and look ever to public welfare and less to sentiment, which is only another name for folly.—Union town Telegram.

HERON AND WILSON WORK

Irrington, Aug. 28 (Special)—Enthusiasm in the Irrington-Custer pike movement is still sustained. Foote is actively engaged in securing subscriptions for the western division and is meeting with such marked success that he is planning soon to begin the construction of this division of the highway.

D. C. Heron on the eastern division of the pike, has a list of forty substantial citizens who have pledged themselves with teams for, from ten to thirty days labor.

Beyond Bewleyville Mr. B. S. Wilson is thoroughly enthused in this movement and is meeting with great success; he insures that portion of the pike will be built.—Reported by Mrs. R. B. McGlothlan.

SWEET LIFE

ENDS PEACEFULLY

Minnie Bell Snyder Ladened With Flowers For The Last Time--Death Came Sunday

REV. MR. LEWIS OFFICATES

Minnie Emery died Sunday. Seems she just lived through the season of flowers, and when the leaves began to get ready to fall she let go of this life. For weeks—more than that—nearly a year this young girl was in ill health and her death had been expected all summer.

Her name was Minnie Belle Snyder and was the daughter of Mrs. Linnie Snyder Emery. Miss Snyder always went by her step fathers name. June the fifteenth she was twenty-one years of age. She was a lovely young woman with high ideals, gentle ways and a pure sweet character. Flowers did not come to her too late. Friends of Cloverport and Owensboro showered them on her during her long illness and never got tired doing for this appreciative girl.

The funeral was held from the Baptist church Monday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. James Lewis, of Fordsville, conducted the services, and the sermon and music were beautiful. Lavender and white flowers covered the white casket, and a large number of friends were present at the church and the grave. The pallbearers were: Messrs. Wilbur Homman, Oscar Black, Vivian Tucker, Jas. Lawson, Cris Brabant and Charley Watt Babbage.

Speaker Clark's Review of The Work of Congress

Criticises President Taft
For Vetoes of Tariff Reform Bills

Proud of the Democracy's Record--Praise For the Insurgents

Speaker Champ Clark, the first Democrat to preside over a house of representatives in sixteen years, is decidedly of the opinion that his party has made a good record in the first session of the Sixty-second congress. For the first time in sixteen years the Democrats have been in control of one branch of the national government. For the first time the Democrats have had an opportunity to initiate legislation and control the action of one branch of the national legislature.

Champ Clark occupies the position which by everybody familiar with legislative procedure is conceded to be the second place of importance in the official scale of the United States government.

In the following signed article, written for the American Press Association, he expresses his views of the work of the first session of the Democratic party has controlled the house of representatives for sixteen years. Mr. Clark does not hesitate to criticize the president nor to bestow praise upon those insurgent Republicans who have tried to assist the Democrats in carrying out a tariff revision program. This utterance of Speaker Clark, not only on account of the official position he occupies, but also because he is one of the most prominent possibilities in the next presidential campaign, is both interesting and important.

By CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

THE extraordinary session of congress called by President Taft, which convened on April 4, has been a long one. The labors of the house have been arduous. It has made a magnificent record, on which we can very well afford to go to the country. We tried our best to give the people some relief from the tariff barons and trusts, but President Taft blocked our efforts. More's the pity!

Veto of the wool bill contrasted with President Taft's speech at Winona.

The people will decide in November, 1912, which is the better cause, that of the Democrats or that of the president. How he could veto the wool bill, especially in the face of his Winona speech, it is difficult to discover. I am inclined to the opinion that he will never have cause to regret his veto messages but once, and that will be as long as he lives. Not withstanding the power of the administration both in patronage and personal solicitation, we came very nearly getting the two-thirds vote necessary to pass the bill over his veto, notwithstanding the fact that we have only sixty-three majority in the house. Twenty-two insurgents stood by their guns unflinchingly and courageously. Every Democrat did his duty.

New members discharged their duty with fidelity, industry, punctuality and capacity.

One of the most pleasing features to me of the extra session was the way the new members comport themselves. They discharged their duty with fidelity, industry, punctuality and capacity. Some of them made extraordinary records for new members. Notwithstanding the dire prophecies of evil of the stand pat press and the fears of timorous Democrats as to the results of the extra session, it is now cheerfully admitted on all hands that we have strengthened ourselves. Every Democratic paper in America without exception, nearly all the independent press and some fair minded Republican newspapers endorse our course.

Democrats did not put Taft in a hole. He saved them the trouble.

Some ill advised friends of President Taft have been claiming that we have tried to put him in a hole, but I said Friday, Aug. 18, in my speech closing the debate on the wool veto, that instead of our trying to put him in a hole he had saved us the trouble and had put himself in a hole.

It was claimed by the standpatners and by the president himself that the wool bill was not duly considered. It is not true, as I demonstrated in my speech by giving the dates. The Democratic members of the ways and means committee gave nearly as much time to the consideration of the wool schedule alone as the Republican members in the Sixtieth and Sixty-first congresses gave to the wool schedule and the thirteen other schedules. So that assertion of the president and his stand pat cohorts goes where the woodbine twines. It is simply preposterous and is a feeble effort to find a reason for the wool veto, for which there was no reason except the demand of the standpatners. They, and they only, endorse the vetoes.

Democrats made an honest effort to reduce the tariff on necessities of life.

I believe that three-fourths of the American people, without regard to politics, believe that the rates of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill ought to be reduced, especially on the necessities of life. The Democrats in both house and senate and the Republican insurgents in both house and senate tried honestly to reduce them, but the pres-

INFLAM- MATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health. I have no more pain, my nerves are stronger and I can do my own work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me after everything else had failed, and I recommend it to all other suffering women."

—Mrs. Wm. Seals, 605 W. Howard St., Creston, Iowa.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

defect would have none of it, notwithstanding his solemn and frequently quoted declaration in his Winona speech that the rates of the wool schedule are too high and ought to be reduced.

"The only politics we played was to discharge our duty honestly and keep our promises."

The people are not fools, and they will have no difficulty in deciding that we have stood their friends in all things at this session, and I feel absolutely certain that they will stand by us. The stand pat organs charge us with having played politics. The only politics we played was to discharge our duty honestly and courageously and to religiously keep our promises to the people, which, according to my way of thinking, is the only honest and honorable way to play politics. That's the only sort of politics that I know how to play—the only kind I am willing to play.

SUES FOR A FORCED JAG.

Sunday School Teacher Wants $55,000 as Recompense.

Harry J. Bohart, Presbyterian Sunday school teacher of Kansas City, has filed suit in the circuit court asking $55,000 damages from the Missouri Pacific railroad because that company's employees forced him to drink whisky enough from a jug to make him drunk.

The petition relates that Bohart and John Laughlin went to Lake City, a station on the Missouri Pacific north of Kansas City, one day last fall. When they started to return they found the train was late and would not reach Lake City until midnight. They sought refuge in the depot from the cold while waiting for the train.

The petition alleges that the station agent and operator informed Bohart that they expected to have a jolly evening and brought forth a jug of whisky. Bohart, who up to that time had never tasted whisky, was the first to be asked to drink. When he refused it is alleged that the men forced him at the point of a revolver to swallow the liquor.

The Sunday school teacher claims to have become intoxicated and to have suffered a splitting headache the following day.

An effort will be made in the suit to hold the railroad responsible on the ground that its employees in charge of the depot were the prime movers in the affair.

FERNBANK DAM IN OHIO RIVER TO BE OPENED FORMALLY SEPT. 4

Celebration Which Will Continue a Whole Week Has Been Planned.

Completion Marks Another Step In $60,000,000 Improvement.

FIVE HUNDRED Ohio valley cities and towns will participate in the celebration at Cincinnati of the opening of the government dam at Fernbank, O., during the week of Sept. 4. Practically every town from Pittsburg to Cairo, Ill., will be represented.

Fernbank dam is one link in a chain of fifty-four dams which the United States government has started to build and which will be completed within the next ten or twelve years at a cost of $60,000,000. The Fernbank dam cost $1,800,000. The purpose of the improvement is to allow boats to navigate on the Ohio river during twelve months of the year instead of being compelled to cease operations at various times on account of low water, thus halting river commerce generally and the transportation of coal particularly.

The series of dams will overcome the fall of the river, which at Pittsburg is 691.56 feet above sea level and at Cairo 272 feet above sea level, a drop of 419.56 feet, and provide a series of pools or inland lakes, connected by locks, which will insure a stage of at least nine feet of water at all points from the source to the mouth of the river. The dams will be from eight to ten feet in height and constructed

United States army engineer, who is in charge of the works and improvements on the Ohio river, gives an indication of the possibilities accruing from the construction of the dam. The total number of registered steamers in Major Jervy's district is 226, the net registered tonnage 41,057, the number of passengers carried the past year 4,313,528. The total value of the freight carried was $358,890,899 and amount of freight carried was 11,112,286 tons.

Program For the Week.

The week's festivities will begin on Monday with receptions to distinguished visitors and a monster "home coming" meeting at Music hall at night at which guests and leading citizens will make addresses.

On Tuesday, Sept. 5, there will be a parade of all the steamboats in the harbor, with many coming from other portions of the river. After going from Cincinnati to the upper end of the "nine foot stage," a distance of about twelve miles, the gayly decorated fleet will proceed down the river to the Fernbank dam, located thirteen miles below the city, and after the invited guests have disembarked the formal dedication of the dam will take place, coinciding by passing two of the steamers through the lock in order to

ONE MILLION PATENTS ISSUED

Ohio Inventor Gets Distinction Sought by Many.

AMERICA LEADS THE WORLD.

Thirty Per Cent of All Patents Have Been Issued in This Country—Nearly 10,000 Granted Before Serial Plan of Numbering Was Adopted.

Announcement of the issue of the millionth patent (since they have been serially numbered) was announced recently by Commissioner Edward B. Moore. It was issued to an Akron (O.) man for a puncture proof tire for automobile and other vehicles, depending upon rubber springs for its resiliency.

Commissioner Moore said the application came up in the regular order of business, was numbered and carried through the regular channels and was signed without ceremony. Numerous requests were received from various inventors for this distinction, but they were not heeded.

Englishman Got First Patent.

This patent, although numbered 1,000,000, is in reality not the millionth for the reason that prior to July 28, 1836, there were granted 9,957 patents without numbers, so that counting from the first patent granted, July 31, 1790, and including the 9,957 unnumbered patents, the millionth patent would be the one numbered 990,043, issued April 18, 1911. The first one was granted to Clarence Thorvald Hasen of Lancaster, England, for a machine to make tubes from fibrous materials.

The American patent system was founded by an act of congress April 10, 1790. Thomas Jefferson, then secretary of state, inspired it and may be said to have been its father. He took great pride in it, it is said, and gave personal consideration to every application that was made for a patent during the years between 1790 and 1793.

Under this act applications for patents were examined by a board of commissioners consisting of the secretary of state, the secretary of war and the attorney general, and after having been passed upon by this tribunal they still required the certificate of the attorney general and the signature of the president. The first board consisted of Thomas Jefferson, secretary of state; Henry Knox, secretary of war, and Edmund Randolph of Virginia, attorney general. The first patent was granted to Samuel Hopkins on July 31, 1790, for manufacturing potash and pearl ash.

Fees Then and Now.

The act of 1790 prescribed the following fees for the granting of patents, which are in striking contrast with those exacted today: "For receiving and filing the petition, 50 cents; for filing specifications, per copy sheet containing 100 words, 10 cents; for making out the patent, $2; for affixing the great seal, $1; for indorsing the day of delivering the same to the patentee, including all intermediate services, 10 cents." Today the government fees amount to $35.

In 1793 the patent laws were revised, and from that time until 1836 no system was maintained and every application that was made was granted. In 1836 congress passed new laws that are the foundation of the present patent laws. It was in this year that patents were first numbered, July 28, 1836. Patent No. 1 was granted to John Rugles of Thomaston, Me., for a locomotive steam engine for inclined planes. Since that time 1,225,000 applications have been made, of which 1,000,000 have been granted. The one 990,000 pending; the rest are approved. These represent an aggregate expenditure of $47,000,000 in exchange of ideas from the inventors alone.

Under these laws set at 1793 the board of commissioners was established, and the power to grant patents was vested in the secretary of state. It was not until 1836 that the office of commissioner of patents was established. Henry L. Ellsworth was the incumbent.

Grinding Out 35,000 a Year.

America leads the world as an inventive nation. France coming next, with 445,000 patents; then Great Britain, with 430,000; Germany, with 250,000; Belgium, 240,000; Canada, 135,000. The Bahamas and Liberia share the "booby" prize, with two patents each. The total number of patents granted by all nations of the world is 3,150,000, of which 30 per cent have been granted by the United States.

The patent office is now granting patents at the rate of 35,000 a year, applications being received at the rate of 65,000 per annum, the examination of which requires 375 examiners.

Owing to the enormous increase in the business of the patent office in the last few years its building has become very much overcrowded, and Commissioner Moore hopes that congress will appropriate the $7,000,000 now in the treasury to the credit of the patent office for a new building.

More Railroad Employees.

Nearly 200,000 new employees were added to the pay rolls of the railroad companies of the United States between June 30, 1909, and June 30, 1910, according to the annual report of the interstate commerce commission.

VIEW OF THE FERNBANK DAM AND STEAMER IN THE LOCK.

at a distance of twenty or more miles apart, according to the topography of the country. A number of these dams and locks are already completed.

Construction of the Fernbank dam as begun in May, 1905. It is about 600 feet wide and is made up of 325 locks, each slightly more than three feet wide. At low water these locks are raised, forming a dam twelve feet in height which extends across the entire river. When the river is high the locks are lowered and the perfectly flat on the bottom of the river. On the Ohio side is located the lock, which is used at low water. This lock is 1,800 feet long with its approaches. The lock proper in which the boats are raised or lowered to the level of the river is 600 feet long and 110 feet wide. It requires about twenty minutes to pass a boat from one level to the other.

The lock, which forms one of the most vital parts of the dam, is on the Ohio shore. It is 600 feet long and 110 feet wide, and the walls forming it are thick and heavy. The lock is closed by an upper and a lower gate made of steel and heavy timbers. Each gate is operated by a compressed air engine. The lock is so large that it can hold and lock through several steam boats or ten coal barges at once. When a vessel enters the lock from the lower pool the gates are closed and water pours into the lock through sixteen sluices in the upper wall of the lock to raise the level to that of the upper pool. There are also sluices in the gates, so that water may be admitted through the upper gate and discharged through the lower gate. In the lower side of the lock wall are sixteen sluices to permit the water to flow out of the lock.

A recent report of Major H. Jervy, illustrate to the visitors the method by which boats are taken from a higher to a lower level, or vice versa. After the ceremonies at the dam the marine carnival will return to the city, where at night there will be "welcome home" fires burned on all the hills overlooking the river.

Wednesday, Sept. 6, will be Covington (Ky.) day, the business men of that city having provided entertainment for visitors in the shape of trolley rides, genuine Kentucky minstrel shows, moving picture entertainments, band concerts, the serving of the famous Kentucky burgoo, fireworks and other features. On the Cincinnati side of the river at the same time there will be a series of band concerts at League ball park in the morning and afternoon and a display of fireworks at night.

Thursday, Sept. 7, will see another river parade in the form of a pageant of decorated pleasure boats, several hundred in number, with cash prizes for the boats showing the best decorations.

Friday, Sept. 8, two attractions will be offered. In the afternoon there will be motorboat and rowing races on the river immediately in front of the city, including a race between three boats that are capable of making upward of thirty-seven miles an hour. At night a street pageant, illustrating by a series of twenty floats the evolution of navigation from the time of Noah's ark up to the present day battleship and ocean liner, will be given. There will be many uniformed organizations in this parade.

The final day of the celebration, Saturday, Sept. 9, will be given over to automobile road races and aeroplane exhibitions.

REVENGE

Revenge is a naked sword—
It has neither hilt nor guard.
Wouldst thou wield this brand of the Lord:
Is thy grasp then firm and hard?
But the closer thy clutch of the blade,
The deadlier blow thou wouldst deal,
Deeper wound in thy hand is made—
It is thy blood reddens the steel.
And when thou hast dealt the blow—
When the blade from thy hand has flown—
Instead of the heart of the foe
Thou mayst find it sheathed in thine own!

How do you think of a railroad? Or have you ever given it a thought? Do you take a pride in helping to keep the station neat and the passenger cars clean? Do you throw paper or apple peelings on the floors? Everybody who passes in a depot door or puts his foot on the train can give the railroad a certain amount of consideration, that if every man would give, would mean much to the company. Many people seem to think of a railroad as a money concern that can pay for anything, no matter how trifling or tremendous.

Railroads are humans from the fact that they are run by human beings—men like you and me. And we should treat them so and extend to them the courtesy that we wish them to extend to us. We mean the people who run the railroads, and these include the men on the section to the President and General Manager. If we knock on them and carry it to the point of discourtesy, they will knock us and we had rather walk than to ride with a grouchy conductor or come in contact with any employee who does not have regard for the public. The Golden Rule is a valuable asset to the man who travels on the railroad.

Judge Waggoner, attorney Eskridge and the members of the Fiscal Court met at Holt Saturday to look into the matter of bridges so badly needed on the river road. They decided to build two iron bridges: one 150 foot span, the other 100 foot. The sites are located above the railroad. Iron tubing and concrete will be used. This road has been impassable for two years, the bridges have been down and the farmers of Holt have had to depend on the railroad alone to come to Cloverport to market. The repairing of this road will mean a great deal to the welfare of this town and the good name of the county. The road can be seen from the train and its terrible condition gave cause for many detrimental remarks from passengers who were citizens of other communities.

Nearly all of the public schools open next week. This is one of the most important months of the year—the beginning of another term of school work. All persons having children of school age should be interested in sending them the very first day and should lend personal aid in making this school year the best ever known to the teachers. This is the age of school progress. We all must take part in the movement to establish closer unity between the parent, teacher and pupil. This can only be done by occasional visits to the school and getting in touch with the work of both the pupils and the teachers.

If the young boys and girls in your family are not reading the News, get them interested in it. Let them form the reading habit. We try to make our paper a life improver as well as a recorder of events. Let them find out things for themselves, even the news items. Who is more interesting than the person who knows a bit of real news? Urge the children to read. It will make their little day dreams higher and will make them grow fatter and nobler.

C. L. Beard's sale Saturday, September 9, will be a splendid opportunity to purchase a good, small farm and fine Jersey cattle and hogs. A man can go to this sale and equip himself for next year's business. It is the small farm well tilled that is now bringing results. The 100 acre farmer is the man who is making money farming in Breckenridge county.

Cow Heel certainly is in bad need of a sewerage or drainage system of some kind. Every time there is a hard rain the yards and streets are flooded. The town ought to make an effort to bring relief to the residents out through Oak street and take steps to assist them in protecting their property from the waters off the hills.

The show of fine cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry at the Fair last week, opened our eyes as it did the eyes of many, to the great improvement in our stock interests. We have always preached that Breckenridge county has as good as the best in Kentucky and now we know it. We are producing the goods.

In a few days we send out notifications to subscribers whose subscriptions expire in September. We urge you again to send in your renewal for one year instead of three months. Send it promptly. This saves us inconvenience and makes things in our print shop move with system and satisfaction.

We thank the management of the Overstreet recital given at Irvington last evening for the complimentary tickets extended to the press and regret it was not convenient to attend.

LITTLE STORIES WRITTEN

While The Press Thunders

BY LOUISE

Mrs. Ed Pate was up town Monday with her baby son, James McDonald. He is the jolliest chunk not to be able to say a word, walk a step or bite a crumb, that anyone could wish to see. James McDonald is just learning to crawl. A few days back Mrs. Pate found him on the floor kicking up his heels and throwing out his fists with a vengeance. He was covered from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet with salt! She was startled and called her three-year-old son, William Ashby, to learn what had happened to little brother. William Ashby hesitated then explained: "Mother, uncle told me that McDonald was almost spoiled to pieces and he needed a good salting."

If you like to hear the French harp, ask Vivian Pierce to play for you. The instrument, perhaps, is antique, but he carries it around as though it were the latest musical stunt in Newport society. Mr. Pierce is home from the West and he is thoroughly enjoying his visit. He says this is the first chance he has ever had time to be with the boys and girls much. They are glad to have him for he makes fun for the whole crowd. One of the girls of the younger set said the other night: "If Viv promises you a stick of candy, he gets it."

We never have said: "I seen and I taken," but not until the other day did we learn that it is not correct to say: "He don't." We should say: "He does not." The verb do is plural and cannot be used with a singular noun. When you want to use "don't," first try "do not". Every day a person can learn something, if he has mastered that hard lesson of being willing to be taught.

o o o

Have you the fad of saving pennies? The Plank girls, Mildred Babbage and Addie Fairleigh are saving every penny they find.

o o o

Few girls wear hat pins now. Mr. Odewalt, the genial jeweler at Gibson's, tried to sell two young ladies some pretty hat pins Friday. One had a basket hat on and she told him the lace lining held it on securely. "You wear one, don't you?", he said to the girl who wore an enormous creation. The girl gracefully lifted her big, black hat and he was amazed to see that she wore not a single hat pin. No rats, no hat pins, almost like being a little girl again!

We were talking recently to a young woman who had returned from a visit in a large town where full fledged society events were pulled off nearly every day and night in the week. Before she went she learned that dancing and cards were the leading amusements there; she was not accomplished in either and for fear that she would be a stick for her hostess she mastered both before packing her trunk. As soon as the girl arrived in the town every person asked her: "Do you swim, Miss Smith?" She was sorely disappointed. She was like a fish out of water and the arts she had purposely mastered were no more than rusty tools. After all she had to depend on her own personality to make a hit. Miss Smith made it.

In fact, it is not tennis, dancing, cards, swimming, singing, or any at all amusements that make a girl known as a charming visitor. She can be a wall-flower on every occasion and yet be in demand. Ray Heyser has gotten as much pleasure out of being a wall-flower as many a girl has in being the belle of the ball.

"In ourselves, the sunshine dwells
From ourselves, the music swells;
By ourselves, our lives are fed
With sweet or bitter daily bread."

When visiting and at home turn what you don't know and don't do into a charm. There are many others like you who have few gifts and few graces; you can give yourself out to them in sympathy—understanding! It's just that gay, happy little way a girl flashes out a bit of sunshine to others—that is the secret of real charm.

John D. Babbage, Jr., representing the Lanston Monotype Company, of Philadelphia, was home Sunday from Memphis. He says that one of the best money-saving equipments recently made now for traveling men is the placing of typewriters in the rooms of hotels. Drop a dime in the slot on the machine and it is unlocked for thirty minutes. Hotel stenographers charge 20 cents a page for type-writing, and a man who uses the type-writer can write ten or fifteen letters in a half hour.

J. H. Sturgell, of Midway, Ill., was here last week purposely to buy a farm in Breckenridge county, which he saw advertised in the News. When he got the farm the owner raised the price to $4000 more than it was advertised and Mr. Sturgell did not take it. A representative of the News asked Mr. Sturgell how he knew of the farm. "I picked up two copies of the Breckenridge News off the station platform at Midway about two weeks ago," he said. These were the papers Mr. John Ditto threw off the train. You remember in his letter published in the News last week, he mentioned having two copies of the paper. It pays to advertise in a newspaper that is attractive enough for a man to pick up after it has been thrown away by some one else.

An Ulster county farmer made a savings bank of the summer kitchen stove during the winter, and every spare one dollar or five dollar bill William got he stuffed in to a tin box which he kept in the oven. When the hot weather finally came his wife concluded to

SASAFRAS-BROOM-SAGE VISION SHATTERED

Luther Board Returns From Texas To Find Old Breckenridge Teeming With Progress

Thirty-seven years ago Luther Board left Breckenridge county—the fields behind him then were growing under their load of sasafra and broom sage, the woods were moaning with their heavily laden persimmon trees, razor backed hogs and long-horned bony cattle were the farmers' best efforts. Mr. Board came back last week from Texas with his daughter, Miss Ethel. At our County Fair Mr. Board's thirty-seven year old vision was shattered—he saw there fat, sassy Duroc and Red Berkshire hogs floored with the weight of their pork chops that fetch fancy prices in Broadway cafes. The short-horned and blue-ribboned Jerseys, the product of the same old fields he left behind. Mr. Board's trip into the county has shown him that sasafra and broom sage have given way to wheat, corn and tobacco, that the persimmon trees have been crowded out by the profitable orchards of fancy fruit.

Mr. Board is going back to Waco where he lives with a new vision of the new Breckenridge.

CHAPTER XVI.

AT 10 INSTEAD OF 12.

"I DON'T care a rush what you do to me. If you don't believe your own officer who swore he saw Ranelagh's hands upon my sister's throat, then this world is all a jumble and it makes very little difference to me whether I'm alive or dead."

When these words of Arthur Cumberland were repeated to me I echoed them in my inmost soul. I, too, cared very little whether I lived or died.

The grand jury reeled off its cases and finally took up ours. To the last I hoped—sincerely, I think—that I should be the man to suffer indictment. But I hoped in vain. A true bill was brought against Arthur, and his trial was set for Jan. 18.

The first use I made of my liberty was to visit Adelaide's grave. In that sacred place I could best review my past and gather strength for the future. The future! Was it under my control? Did Arthur's fate hang upon my word? I believed so. But had I strength to speak that word? I had expected to; I had seen my duty clearly enough before the sitting of the grand jury. But now that Arthur was indicted, now that it was an accepted fact that he would have to stand trial instead of myself, I was conscious of such a recoil from my contemplated action that I lost all confidence in myself and my stoical adherence to what I considered the claims of justice.

I trusted Arthur; I distrusted Carmel. But she had claims to consideration which he lacked. She was a woman. Her fall would mean infinitely more to her than any disgrace to him. Even he had seemed to recognize this. Miserable and half hearted as his life had been, he had shown himself man enough not to implicate his young sister in the crime laid to his charge. What, then, was I that I should presume to disregard his lead in the difficult maze in which we were both lost? Yet because of the self-restraint he manifested he had my sympathy, and I resolved to stand his friend if I saw the case really going against him. Till then I would consider the helpless girl, tongue tied by her condition and injured enough already by my misplaced love and its direful consequences.

The only chance I now allowed myself was an occasional midnight stroll up Husted street. This was as near as I dared approach Carmel's windows. I feared some watchful police spy. Perhaps I feared my own hardness to be restrained loneliness.

This was before Carmel left with her nurse for Lakewood. After that event I turned my head no more in taking my midnight stroll. I was not told the day or hour of her departure, happily, perhaps, for us both, for I could never have kept away from the station. I heard later that she was deliberately driven past the Whispering Pines, though the other road was more direct and less free, if anything, from possible spectators. They thought, no doubt, that a sight of the place might awaken whatever memories remained of the last desperate scene preceding her brother and sister's departure for this out of the way spot. They little knew how cruel was the test or what a storm of realization might have overwhelmed her mind as her eye fell on those accursed walls, peering from their tower of snow laden pines. But I did, and I never rested till I learned how she had borne herself in her slow drive by the two guarded gateways—merrily, it seems, and with no sign of the remembrances I feared.

One sentence, and one only, reached my ears of all she said before she disappeared from town.

"If Adelaide were only going too! But I suppose I shall meet her and Mr. Ranelagh somewhere before my return. She must be very happy, but not so peaceful as I am. She will see that when we meet. I can hardly wait for the day."

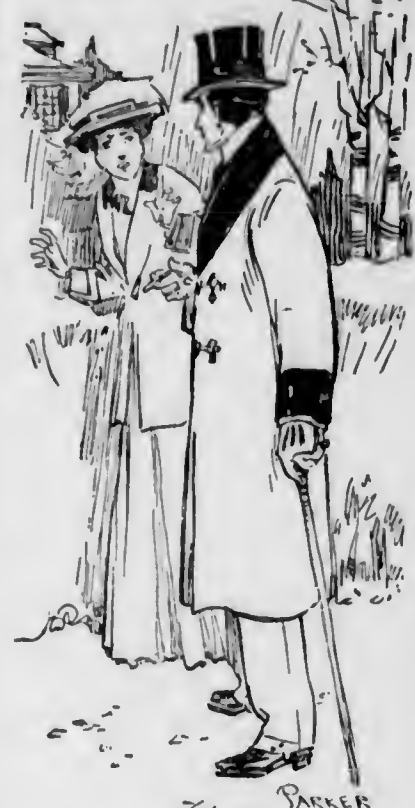

One incident more before I enter upon the serious business of the trial. I started one night for my walk at 10 o'clock instead of 12. I went the old way, and, the old longing recurring at the one charmed spot on the road, I cast a quick look at the deserted house which, short as it was, roused feelings which kept my head lowered for the remainder of my walk north and to the very moment when, on my return, the same chimneys and overhanging roofs came again into view through the wintry branches. Then habit lifted my head and I paused to look again, when the low sound of a human voice, suppressed into a moan or sob, caused me to glance about for the woman or child who had uttered this note of sorrow. No one was in sight, but as I started to move on I heard my name uttered in choked tones from behind the hedge separating the Fulton grounds from the city sidewalk.

Had the voice issued from this isolated point of darkness? I went back to see. A pitiful figure was crouching there, a frail, agitated little being.

"Ella Fulton!" I exclaimed. "You wish to speak to me?"

"Hush!" she prayed, with a frightened gesture toward the house. "No one knows I am here. Mamma thinks me in bed, and papa, who is out, may come home any minute. Oh, Mr. Ranelagh, I'm in such misery, and no one but you can give me any help. I have watched you go by night after night, and I have wanted to call out and beg you to come in and see me or let me go and meet you somewhere, and I have not dared. It was so late. Tonight you have come earlier, and I have slipped out and—oh, Elwood, you won't think badly of me? It's all about Arthur, and I shall die if some one does not help me and tell me how I can reach him with a message."

She was a girl of puny physique and nervous manner—the last sort of person you would expect Arthur Cumberland to admire or even to have patience with and the very last sort who could be expected to endure his rough ways or find anything congenial to herself in his dissipated and purposeless life. But the freaks of youthful passion are endless, and it was evident that they loved each other sincerely.

Reassuringly pressing her hand, I was startled to find a small piece of paper clutched convulsively within it. "For Arthur," she explained under her breath. "I thought you might find some way of getting to him. Father and mother are so prejudiced. They have never liked him, and now they believe the very worst. They would lock me up if they knew I was speaking to you about him. Mother is very stern and says that all this nonsense between Arthur and myself must stop; that we must never, no matter whether he is cleared or—oh—Silence, then a little gasp.

I hardly blamed the mother. "I love Arthur. I don't think him guilty, and I would gladly stand by him if they would let me. I want him to know this. I want him to get such comfort as he can out of my belief and my desire to serve him. I want to sacrifice myself, but I can't. I can't!" she moaned. "You don't know how mother frightens me. When she looks at me the words flutter on my tongue and I feel as if it would be easier to die than to acknowledge what is in my heart."

I could believe her. Mrs. Fulton was a strong woman, whom many men shrink from encountering needlessly.

"Yet your mother is your very best friend," I ventured gently. "Not in this, not in this," she objected. "I must get a word to Arthur—I must."

I saw that she had some deeper reason than appeared for desiring communication with him. I was debating how best to meet the situation and set her right as to my ability to serve her without breaking down her spirit too seriously when I felt her feverish hand pressing her little note into my unwilling palm.

"Don't read it," she whispered, innocent of all offense and only anxious to secure my good offices. "It's for Arthur. I've used the thinnest paper, so that you can secrete it in something he will be sure to get. Don't disappoint me. I was sorry for you, too, and glad when they let you out. Both of you are old playmates of mine, but Arthur—"

I had to tell her. I had to dash her small hopes to the ground. "Forgive me, Ella," I said, "but I cannot carry this message or even get it to him secretly. I am watched myself. There is a man who sees him constantly and may be induced to assure Arthur of your belief and continued interest in him. That man is his lawyer, Mr. Moffat. Any one will tell you how to reach him."

"No, no," she disclaimed hurriedly, breathlessly. "My last hope was in you. You wouldn't think the worse of me for what I've done, or let mother know. I couldn't tell a stranger even if he went right to Arthur with it." Then, stepping up to my side, she whispered in my ear, "There is something I could say which might!"

I stopped her. Right or wrong, I stopped her. She possessed evidence, or thought she did, which might help to clear Arthur. Evidence of what? Evidence which would implicate Carmel? The very thought unnerved me. "I had rather not be the recipient of this confidence if it is all important or at all in the line of testimony. Remember the man I mentioned. He will be glad to hear of anything helpful to his client."

Her distress mounted to passion. "It's—it's something that will destroy my mother's confidence in me. I disobeyed her. I did what she would never have let me do if she had known. I—I used to meet Arthur in the driveway back by the barns. I had a key made to the little side door so that I could do it. I used to meet him late. I would get up out of bed when mother was asleep and dress myself and sit at the window until I heard him come up the street. Then I would steal down and catch him on his way to the stables. I—I had a good reason for this, Elwood. He knew I would be there, and it brought him home earlier and not quite so full of liquor. If he was very bad he would come up the other way, and I would sit waiting and crying till 3 o'clock struck, then creep into my bed and try to sleep. Nights and nights I have done this. Nothing else in life seemed so important, for it did hold him back a little, but not so much as if he had loved me more. He loved me some, but he couldn't have loved me very much or he would have sent me some word or seen me. If but for a minute, since Adelaide's death. And he hasn't—he hasn't—and that makes it harder for me to acknowledge the watch I kept on him and how I know he never went through our grounds for the second time that night. He went once, about 9, but not later. I am certain of this, for I was looking out for him till 3 in the morning. If he came back and then returned afterward to town it was through his own street, and that takes so long he would never have been able to get to the place they said he did at the time they have agreed upon. I know that he needs some one to come out boldly in his cause, and I want to be that some one, and I will be, too, whatever happens to me, if—I must," she faintly added.

I was dumb, but not from lack of interest or from unsympathetic feeling for this brave hearted girl. The significance of the situation was what held me speechless. Here was help for Arthur without my having all the horrors of Carmel's downfall by an impulsive act of my own. For a moment hope in one burning and renewing flame soared high in my breast. I was willing to accept my release in this way. I was willing to shift the load from my own back to the delicate shoulders of this shrinking but ardent girl. Then reason returned if consideration halted, and I asked myself: "But is the help she offers of any practical worth? Would her timid declarations, trembling as she was between her awe of her parents and her desire to serve the man she loved, weigh in the balance against the evidence contrived by the district attorney?"

CHAPTER XVII.

ALL THIS STOOD.

I SHALL spare you the opening details of the trial, also much of preliminary testimony. Enough that at the close of the sixth day the outlook was a serious one for Arthur Cumberland. The prosecution appeared to be making good its claims. The quiet and unexpectedly dignified way in which at the beginning the defendant had faced the whole antagonistic courtroom with the simple plea of "Not guilty" was being slowly but surely forgotten in the accumulated proofs of his discontented life under his sister's dominating influence, his desire for independence and a free use of the money held in trust for him by this sister under their father's will, the quarrels which such a situation would naturally evoke between characters cast in such different molds and actuated by such opposing tastes and principles, and the final culmination of the same at the dinner table when Adelaide forced him, as it were, to subscribe to her prohibition of all further use of liquor in their house. Following this evidence of motive came the still more damaging one of opportunity. He was shown to have been in the clubhouse at or near the time of Adelaide's death. The matter of the bottles was gone into and the event in Cuthbert road. Then I was called to the stand and my testimony asked for.

I had prepared myself for the ordeal and faced it unflinchingly. That I might keep intact the one point necessary to Carmel's safety I met my inquisitors now, as before, with the utmost candor in all other respects. Indeed, in one particular I was even more exact in my details than in any previous examination. I acknowledged what I had hitherto concealed, that in my first entrance into the clubhouse I had come upon a man's derby hat and coat hanging in the lower hall, and when questioned more minutely on the subject allowed it to appear that it was owing to the disappearance of these articles during my stay upstairs that I had been led into saying that some one had driven away from the Whispering Pines before the coming of the police.

This, as you will see, was in open contradiction of my former statements that I had seen an unknown party thus attired driving away through the upper gateway just as I entered by the lower. But it was a contradiction which, while noted by Mr. Moffat, Arthur's lawyer, failed to injure me with the jury and much less with the spectators. That I should prevaricate even to my own detriment at a preliminary examination only to tell the truth openly and like a man when in court and under the sanctity of an oath was, in the popular estimation, something to my credit, and Mr. Moffat, whose chief recommendation as counsel lay in his quick appreciation of the exigencies of the moment, did not press me too sharply on this point when he came to his cross examination.

But in other respects he drove me

It seemed doubtful. She would not be believed, and I should have to back up her statement with my own hitherto unexpressed testimony—a woman to be sacrificed whilsoever course I took. Such native chivalry as remained to me urged me to spare this little friend of mine. Then Carmel's image rose before me, glorious, impassioned, driven by the fierce onrush of some mighty inherent force into violent deeds undreamed of by most women, but when thus undriven, gentle in manner, elevated in thought, refined as only a few rare characters are refined, and my heart stood still again with doubt and I could not say: "It is your duty to save him at all hazards. Brave your father, brave your mother, brave public opinion and possibly the wrecking of your whole future, but tell the truth and rid your days of doubt, your nights of remorse." I could not say this. So many things might happen to save Arthur, to save Carmel, to save the little woman before me. I would trust that future, temporize a bit and give such advice as would relieve us both from immediate fear without compromising Arthur's undoubted rights to justice.

Meanwhile something must be said at once. As soon as she looked my way again I spoke:

"Ella, this is no easy problem you have offered me. I can sympathize with you, possibly as no one else can, but I cannot reach Arthur either by word or by message. Your father is the man to appeal to in case interference becomes necessary and you must speak. You have not quite the same fear of him that you have of your mother. He's a just man. You may shock his fatherly susceptibilities, you may even lose some of his regard, but he will do the right thing by you and Arthur. Will you?"

"I will try. I could only tell father on my knees, but I will do it if—I must. Now I must go. You have been good, only I asked too much." And with no other farewell she left me and disappeared up the walk.

I lingered till I heard the faint click of her key in the door she had secretly made her own; then I moved on. As I did so I heard a rustle somewhere about me on street or lawn. I never knew whence it came, but I felt assured that neither her fears nor mine had been quite unfounded—that a listener had been posted somewhere near us and that a part, if not all, we had said had been overheard. I was furious for an instant; then the soothing thought came that possibly Providence had ordained that the Gordian knot should be cut in just this way.

But the event bore no ostensible fruit. The week end-d, and the case of the people against Arthur Cumberland was moved for trial.

I had prepared myself for the ordeal and faced it unflinchingly. That I might keep intact the one point necessary to Carmel's safety I met my inquisitors now, as before, with the utmost candor in all other respects. But in other respects he drove me hard. An effort was made by him first of all to discredit me as a witness. My lack of appreciation for Adelaide and my secret but absorbing love for Carmel were inexorably brought out; also the easy, happy-go-lucky tenor of my life and my dogged persistence in my course I thought consistent with my happiness. My character was well known in this town of my birth, and it would have been folly for me to attempt to gloss it over. I had not even the desire to do so. If my sins exacted penance I would pay it here and now and to the full. Only Carmel should not suffer. I refused to admit that she had given any evidences of returning my reckless passion. My tongue would not speak the necessary words, and it was not made to. It was not her character, but mine, which Mr. Moffat was endeavoring to assail.

But though I was thus shown up for what I was, in a manner most public and undesirable, neither the rulings of the court nor the attitude of the jury betrayed any loss of confidence in me as a credible witness, and, seeing this, the wily lawyer shifted his ground and confided himself to an endeavor to shake me on certain definite and important points concerning my finding of the body. Then he branched off into a less harrowing topic and cross examined me in regard to the ring. I had said that it was on her hand when I bade goodby to her in her own house and that it was not there when I came upon her dead. Had the fact made me curious to examine the band? No. Then I could not tell whether the finger on which she wore it gave any evidence of this ring having been pulled off with violence? No. I could not swear that in my opinion it was? I could not.

The sun's task of cordial and the three glasses, one clean and the others showing signs of having been used, were next taken up, but with no result for the defense. I had told all I knew about these in my direct examination; also about such matters as the bottles found on the kitchen table, the leaving of my keys at the Cumberland house and the fact, well known, that the two bottles of wine left in the wine vault and tabulated by the steward so left in the list found in my apartment were of an exclusive brand unlikely to be found anywhere else in town. I could add nothing more, and, having spoken the exact truth concerning them from the very first, I ran no chance of contradicting myself, even under the close fire of the opposing counsel.

But there was a matter I dreaded to see him approach and which, I was equally sure, with an insight unshared, I believe, by any one else in the whole courtroom, was equally dreaded by the prisoner.

This was the presence in the clubhouse chimney of the half burned letter I had long ago been compelled in my own defense to acknowledge having written to the victim's young sister, Carmel Cumberland. As I saw District Attorney Fox about to enter upon this topic I gathered myself together to meet the onslaught, for in this matter I could not be strictly truthful, since the least slip on my part might awaken the whole world to the fact that it could only have come there through the agency of Carmel herself.

What Mr. Moffat thought of it—what he hoped to prove in the prisoner's behalf by raking this subject over—it was left for me to discover later. The prisoner was an innocent man in his eyes. I was not, and while the time had not come for him to make this openly apparent, he was not above showing even now that the case contained a factor which weakened the prosecution—a factor totally disassociated with the only accepted theory that the crime was simply the result of personal cupidity and drunken spite.

And in this he was right. It did weaken it—weakened it to the point of collapse, if the counsel for the defense had fully acted up to his opportunity. But something withheld him. Just at the moment when I feared the truth must come out he hesitated and veiled gradually away from this subject. In his nervous pining to and fro before the witness stand his eye had rested for a moment on Arthur's, and with this result: The situation was saved, but at a great loss to the defendant.

I began to cherish softened feelings toward Arthur Cumberland from this moment. Was it then or later that he began in his turn to cherish new and less hostile feelings toward myself? He had hated me and vowed my death if I escaped the fate he could now daily see opening out before himself, yet I could see that he was glad to see the slip from my tormentor's hands with my story unimpeached and that he drew his breath more deeply and with much more evidence of freedom now that my testimony had been thoroughly sifted and nothing had come to light implicating Carmel. I even thought I caught a kindly gleam in his eye as it met mine at this critical juncture, and by its light I understood my man and what he hoped from me. He wished me, at any risk to himself, to unite with him in saving Carmel's good name. That I should accede to this, that I should respect his generous wishes and let him go to unmerited destruction for even so important an obligation as we both lay under, was a question for the morrow.

Several short examinations followed mine, all telling in their nature, all calculated to fix in the minds of the jury the following facts:

First.—That Arthur, swayed by cupidity and moved to rage by the scene at the dinner table, had by some unknown means of a more or less violent

FAIR NOTES

Misses Ray Heyser and Cleona Weatherholt, of Cloverport, were guests of Mrs. John E. Kincheloe.

The fair hop Wednesday night was largely attended. There were six men to every girl and the girls had the grand rush. One of the most popular dances was Miss Hannah Beard, who wore a handsome yellow satin trimmed with points of black lace that were on cue of her mother's dresses that she had when a young lady. The yoke was real lace handed down by her grand mother.

Arthur Smith's educated horse attracted much attention. His training was remarkable.

Messrs. Willis Green, Preston Green, Robert Moorman, Dr. Harold Beard, of Livermore; Chas. Edmunds, of Louisville, and W. R. Hensley, were among the leading beaux. One of them waited in Floral Hall entrance two hours for a Cloverport girl and she never did meet him. She was having a good time with his brother.

There were fifteen camel cakes this year. Mrs. Reeves certainly was successful with the floral hall and there was a perfect deluge of beautiful things.

Everybody was pleased and said it was the best, cleanest and best conducted fair ever held. President Beard and Secretary Skillman are to be congratulated.

The best hogs, the best cattle, the best sheep and the best poultry, all raised in Breckenridge county, was one of the best features of the stock show. A stock man who had been to many fairs said: "The display at the State fair may be larger but it won't be any better."

How Cloverport Citizens Can Find Complete Freedom From Kidney Troubles.

If you suffer from backache—From urinary disorders—From any disease of the kidneys, Be cured to stay cured.

Doan's Kidney Pills make lasting cures.

Grateful people testify. Here's one case of it: Mrs. Jacob Snyder, Fourth St., Canfield, Ind., says: "I suffered constantly from pain in my back and when my daughter learned of my condition, she sent me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. They were the first remedy that ever had any effect on my trouble. My back was greatly strengthened through their use and the dull, nagging pain was disposed of. Since then I have always kept Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and have recommended them at every opportunity." (Statement given April 17, 1917.)

A LASTING EFFECT.

On March 11, 1910, when Mrs. Snyder was interviewed, she said: "The statement I gave for publication in 1907, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills still holds good. Kidney trouble has not bothered me since."

Rivalry In Road Building.

In Breckenridge county, where the good roads movement is making perceptible progress, some of the enterprising citizens are raising a fund to build a turnpike from Irvington to Custer. Several road meetings have been held in furtherance of the enterprise and considerable enthusiasm has been aroused. Donation in money, labor, teams, implements and right-of-way are being made by residents along the line, and the prospect is favorable for the early construction of several miles of first-class thoroughfare.

It appears that there are two routes between the two towns by which a turnpike may be built, and this fact has given rise to some differences of opinion as to which route is most practical and feasible. In consequence there is a probability of the building of two turnpikes where only one was originally contemplated. This would be the natural outcome of such a situation. When the good road is constructed others are pretty sure to follow, for a good road is a great object lesson, especially during the winter season. Which ever route may be selected for building the turnpike from Irvington to Custer it is reasonably certain that the other route will be subsequently improved.

It helps the road movement greatly to stir up competition in road building

That has been demonstrated by the Lincoln Way and the Lincoln Central Road. Fortunately the rivalry between these two commendable projects has been good-natured and without any tinge of bitterness. Two good roads are to take the place of two bad ones, and the entire state will be benefited.

Breckenridge county will likewise be the gainer if two turnpikes shall be evolved from a plan which embraced only one. The county cannot have too many improved highways and the Irvington-Custer project will be a moving force for more roads and better roads.—Courier Journal.
